One day in London air
Sky was grey-coal
Drops of crystal rain ran in my, ran in my,
Ran in my veins
And it felt so sad
But then I met a girl
And she seemed to be like
A Monet's painting in her sister's jeans slowed
She wiped all my fear over my days
My hemisphere went far and wide
In her warm embrace
And that was right, oh, so right
I felt like a statue in the light
And that was right, oh, so right
But never good at saying goodbye
Until our flame is burning
Until our flag is calling
Until our hearts are beating
Until our streets are shining
Until our flame is burning
Until our flag is calling
Until our hearts are bleeding
Until our streets are shining, no
Don't cry for me, how can't you see?
There's someone better sure than me
To wipe your eyes, to feed your dream
To read your hands' infinity
Walking in the Park, aching for my leaving All those lovers' names on the bench were screaming
You remind of those rapids where I wanna dive into Standing by your waterfall and gently floating upstream on
And that was right, oh so right
The ocean stones were you and I
And that was right, oh so right,
No ocean wave would pass us by
Until our flame is burning
Until our flag is calling
Until our hearts are bleeding
Until our streets are shining
Until our flame is burning

Until our flag is calling
Until our hearts are beating
Until our streets are shining, no
Donâ€™t cry for me, how canâ€™t you see?
Thereâ€™s someone better sure than me
To blow your clouds, to build your field
To room in your handsâ€™ infinity â€¦until our hearts are bleeding in these streets
Donâ€™t cry for me, how canâ€™t you see?
Thereâ€™s someone better sure than me
To hold your head, to know your needs
To love you wild, to make ends meet
To chase the sun, to rain belief
To snow your pain, to hail your sins
To space your dark, to tame your sea
To lose in your handsâ€™ infinity
To lose in your handsâ€™ infinity
Lose in your handsâ€™ infinity
