The old man
could drive himself around no more so he rode himself round town on a horse
on a big black mare named Kate

been too twisted
twisted up
been too twisted
twisted up
twisted drunk

twisted
twisted drunk
twisted drunk

he carried a gun
and he'd get himself filled up on whisky that he'd bought the night before with his pension
from the war

sometimes
he'd tell stories
about being in the war
floating on the ocean
and the duties
of a tail gunner
and the cold sweat
that'd run from his skin
as the porpoises
looked like torpedoes

bridge
chorus
