It's a secret of the winners, that's why I never got it I come to find the savior in your eyes

All my frozen winters face the blame for the garden
At least I couldn't say that I tried

Fall apart at the softest setback of darkness Dampen towers cry above to the highest liars of them all

All my partial poems come as painless filler I may never be as strong as you'd like

But the way you look at me is such a silent killer Hold me close and tell me
I'm all right

Up all night just thinking of the ways to remain here Born the silences that one time held the keys to paradise

I come runnin' down from heights that I remember Those were times I treasured like a child

Lift this body up because I know I'd better And fall upon the ground with a sigh

Little bandages add up to a coffin, babe I get hopeful every time I see you crack a little smile
