"I Breathe"

I breathe,
clouds beneath my window.

I see rockets in the sky.

I feel
satellites in Limbo.

I breathe,
oxygen up high...

I load lead inside my engine,
Lead and alcohol.

On the radio depending
I sign the protocol.

Hail the audience, the media,
People everywhere!

In the hours ahead I'll see your
Green biosphere,
Clean biosphere,
Castles in the air,
Climbing the stair,
Way to heaven when...

I breathe,
clouds beneath my window.

I see
rockets in the sky.

I feel
satellites in Limbo.

I breathe,
oxygen up high...

I've been trained to navigate my Futurist balloon.

After years, a week will see me
Landing on the moon!

Raise a banner on the planets
(Life grows everywhere)
In the manner of the mission:
"Green biosphere!
Clean biosphere!"
Castles in the air...
Climbing the stair...
Way to heaven... when

I breathe...

Submitter's comments:Â

Here I translate one more (the first one is Tiamat's 'Gaia' of 1991) song by a Swedish band dedicated to biospheric problems caused by humanity. It is noteworthy that namely Scandinavian musicians try to attract their listeners' attention to this problem (for example, the Finnish band Stratovarius released the entire album on this topic), and I know only one song by non-Scandinavian (but French) musician that tells something like that (it's "Wash My World" by Laurent Wolf). It's Scandinavia where people are literally feverish about their nature and environment. As for me, I do care, too.
