Behold your crumbling temple, the ark is now defiled Gnostic rise, evanescent cries, all must die!

Enter the hammer, bloodthirsty pillager, sacramental barbarism
Stone excalibur, set upon the church, a cardinal catalysm

We are warriors from a sect of forgotten heathen grandeur
For now we must dwell in infamy and sin

Hellish onslaught, monuments erased, decimated altar of false sermons
Enigmatic successors, inferior oppressors Come forth to rectify with the bludgeons attack

From discontent we reclaim our destiny Toburn the rightfully spurned, seeded by hate Strike the earth with our venomous talons
A fiery line between sanctification and sin

Engraving the new law of defilement, seized from smouldering ruins
Ark of gold molten for embezzlement, may the devil charge forth

Tremendous fall, priest's head nailed to the wall
We charge through the gates, sworn to desecrate Leaving the scarred remains, a communion in flames Catatonic hammer, this prophecy of punishment Unbound in many a tarnished age

Desecrator of sanctuary

Behold your frivolous ornaments, reduced to scattered nothingness
A graveyard now accumulates where superfluous structures once stood

Congregation flees in terror, engulfed in burning drapes

Obscene harmonies of the choir, shrieking in dismay Mercy killing, douse with acidic words and sulfurous flames

Cursing the cross, trample and burn Besiege all temples with sempiternal hatred Inverted mission, vengeful perdition, the christian fools now flagellated
