riding quietly we started fires and threw bricks ignition the rubbing together of two sticks dead dog
new tricks
left alone
keep this right looking for the cheapest flight and yet another sleepless night bad dreams
the deepest fright and ever through hallways pitch black endless saying never to always once the doors open the audience will file in and then you piano and I try to violin I fall to the floor in dementia and protest my job is to translate into a language that's grotesque drowning in the open waters of frustration and blank rage it troubles the heart and I'm left staring at the blank page
the distorted floor beneath me and blurry skies hands that are on fire can't hide worried eyes the cold sets in in the autumn of a hell and I concentrate on the answers at the bottom of a well

in exile

one more time forever for the mourner dressed in all black and painted into a corner hard rock weeks compared to the soft minutes the few and far between and words that are off limits the horses all ran away they ran away
the birds dispelled eyes that may never make contact words withheld all the cats are black and the sidewalks cracked been down so long I don't know how to act appearing real strangling the steering wheel and choking throttles thinking the worst and drinking outta broken bottles the deepest breath held it in the skeleton that grows twisted are we reading from the right script tight lipped close fisted baring a task

all the questions we're caring to ask while keeping our guards up and wearing a mask making art the war being waged and taking part seeing the stars fall and the sounds of a breaking heart like
