I'm Fine

by Patty Larkin

It's not often that time turns itself around
And you watch your shadow pass you by Every minute, every move, every single sound
Takes on meaning to your eye

In the summer green of cool and sandy beach towns
I stood alone again and cried
Days rolled by and they were warm and hot and round
And I looked for answers in the sky

Now you're holding me through the night
You're holding me in a brand new light
Holding me through the night
And I'm Fine

Don't you tend to wander in some distant daze
When all you've worked for tumbles down
You're an actor in some far away movie haze
Clutch your heart as you hit the ground

But now you're holding me through the night
You're holding me in a brand new light
Holding me through the night
And I'm Fine

Hearts are worth the mending, though they heal up slowly
Every beat hits soft and low
Comes a time when all the pain and hurt is ending
And your heart gets up to go

In the autumn, it was winter's watch I was keeping
And the world was brown and gold
You crept in and kissed me while I lay there sleeping
And handed me a lover's rose

Now you're holding me through the night
You're holding me in a brand new light
Holding me through the nights

And I'm Fine

You're holding me through the night

You're holding me through the night

And I'm Fine

I'm Fine

I'm Fine

Fine
