I never say the right thing
But you always laugh before you turn away from me
And our hearts live in a place
With the napkins we scribbled on The trains that left too late
And forgotten batteries in the back of your dresser drawer
Things you thought you didn't want anymore

But there's something special about you
There's something special about all the things that you do
And on the rooftop of your building
Where the city seems so big I just can't find a place to put all of the things I want to keep

Like how things don't change
How you can talk to me without saying anything
And the same sad movies you watch over and over again
Hoping for a different end

But there's something special about you
There's something special about all the things that you
do
And on the rooftop of your building
Where the city fills my ears
I just can't find a place to put all of the years
Where did they go?

There's something special about you
There's something special about you
There's something special about you
There's something special about you
