You take away the breath I was keeping for sunrise
You appear and the morning looks drab in my eyes
And then again I'll turn down love, having seen you again
Once more you'll disappear, my morning put to shame

You take away the breath I was keeping for sunrise
You appear and the morning looks drab in my eyes
And then again I'll turn down love, having seen you
again
Once more you'll disappear, my morning put to shame

Sometimes I fear that this will go on my life through Each day I spend in an echoed vision of you And then again I'll turn down love, remembering your smile
My every day is spent, thinking of you all the while

The times I've let myself down, my heads spinning round
My eyes see only you
The chances I've lost, opportunities tossed Away and into the blue

You take away the breath I was keeping for sunrise
You appear and the morning looks drab in my eyes
And then again I'll turn down love, having seen you
again
