"The boy waiting"

I have seen the girl walking through crowded streets and crying eyes She holds her breath to keep from talking And though she stares she never wonders why

The streets may be home but the roads don't lead back to where they came from
And I'm only known, as a shadowed figure from a time Where we called across the pathways of our lives

And the boy sits ever waiting as the parents sit in for the ride for there life For the brother slowly wasting He didn't have to be there but such is this life
He knows only what he knows

And I may be here, but I'm the shadowed figure of a time where we cried out for our life

She only keeps it for the memory, of a time, where she cried out for her life to be always as it was and what will be, in this life, we'll all be what we want to be, just be,
just live and breath

I have seen the warrior walking don't I know, that his battle scars are the cause of what he does,
He knows it's best to keep from talking and his eyes are only closed when he blocks out something he doesn't need to know

Only once have I ever seen him cry

But they taught me well, the things I should've known

They said all was well but they only wanted me home
As they sat waiting for me to live and breath

And they taught me how to live and be Yes they taught me how to live and breath
As we all laid out the pathways of our lives
