As we escape the clutches of our angst
Dwelling on sadness seems so long ago
To feel an imbalance in your own rank
Of people who feel the same is shameful.
Just not anymore

Can we remember how it felt to be so fragile
When we said we wouldn't stand the test of time
I need you to Say again how awkward it felt for a while
And now, we're all fine. Yeah, we're all fine.

Clinging to this fight called coming of age
It's apparent that, even now, we're all underage
Tough to say that we don't all feel the same
Doesn't take much to lose identity
It's a shame

Sometimes your days seem more than you asked for Alternatives don't include feeling sorry
It's likely we all might walk out the door
Maybe outside is where we should be

If we were to open up a box full of fear
It'd be the perfect picture to describe all the years
That we wanted to just walk out the door
