the time had come, the deal went down there were signs all around the town and for the first time we all looked around and we gathered as the sun went down along with the sky

we found a spot up on Old Town Hill where the trees turned white and the grass stood still and for a moment took a breath without regret as we waited for what would come next and Janie held my hand she said "what if there is something that I have to do before I die?"

then she held me and she kissed me in the moment she began to cry for her last time

chorus

and the band was playing thunder and the sky was throwing flame and we danced in the stream of a poet's dream on the day the judgement came on the day of the judgement tumbling fury, the sky it gleamed flashing shades the world had never seen and the hill began to shake and roll to the rhythm of the human soul never known before some were scared, some were broken-hearted but the rest of us we got the party started and we feasted on a meal to meet the gods and with the wine that we had saved for so long we raised up our cups and we shouted "here's to you and here's to me and here's to us my friends let us live it for a while in style as we meet our end as we meet our end

and the band played on and we danced all night underneath the shattered moon and the falling sky and our souls burned bright like the summertime cause summer would come no more the world stopped turning, the sun melted away erased our doubts, yeah it was judgement day and the fire felt like a soft rain and we didn't feel any pain just the fleeting love of it all and we knew that all the madness and the glory wouldn't stop until it had swallowed up the party that was raging up on Old Town Hill and I was dancing with Janie still

chorus
