

Dismantled

"Exit"

Faced the crowd
In a blind mirror
Skull smashed headfirst
Against this wall of inner need
I knew this fall
Would send it all down towards the lights
And they will question once more
From their unscathed towers

I'll answer
Go on and force
Your one-bit truth until the end
I'll swallow every bullet
That rips through the hull
A sheltered life crawls forward, vomits
And folds around twin blades
I pull it back like last time
Yet it never cuts through all the way
I always have to take it hostage

Whenever I feel
I find no way to begin
It always bled from within
They fed the dreams so it could rip
I've grown content in this dream
I'll let those others take and give

Whenever I feel
There is no way to begin
I've grown content in this dream
I'll let those others take and give

And if I had
Leaned forward and let their downpours mask
Preburned fields growing supports for a future set in Past
Every reflection would lie and every breath would climb
Blind
Toward their shallow corpse of a self-lit sky
And just it's weight would be enough
To send it all off the edge towards that same undecided

Mind

Towards that self-absorbed conscience that only screams

So predictably

"Someone burn me an exit"

Stormed their black-rise tower looming past

Drove them all out into a corner

Of the memory gridmap

Airlocked and silenced, I kept holding back

Finally burned them all alive

Before cutting off my own blood supply

I knew they had it bypassed to a bloodthirsty human

Mass

That infested with a false promise of a chance

And held a freedom already dried up and past
