(lyrics by The Swoon)

A wonderful song. Although The Swoon only recorded one album that we know of, it was all that we needed. In fact, it was difficult to pick which track to record... we just knew that we wanted to cover one of their songs. As we started to work through the parts of the song, it really started to come together. Nick's bass was recorded with the snare drum chain loose... so you could hear the rattle. Aaron mimicked the acoustic parts perfectly. The aggressive bridge was our own twist on things, but fitting I think. Finally, we added a Beatlesque "Day In The Life" build-up ending to finish it off. It came out just as we wanted. What more can I say? I'll just add the notes from the 'Straight Six' album cover...

One of the most influential bands in our musical development, The Swoon, wrote this beautifully tragic song back in 1989. The album was heard by far too few people and the respect that is deserved of the band, the album, and this song was never given them either. May they consider themselves very highly honored in our musical lives, possessing songs that we wished we had written. However, this is the best that we can do.

The words to this song paint a wonderful and terrible picture of confusion, fear, and consequence. I pray that the last two lines especially would be smelling salts for all of us in the paths that we choose - "don't trouble yourself with seeking peace. go cheap..." Jerry had some beers and started to sing he knows just what he means he don't mean a thing he waited for the wisdom years would bring, to him on the refrigerator door are the words he had written moments before it says 'i hope i never have to go to war'

Speak soft, baby don't you talk to me he goes to the dance and falls in love years later it's still her he's thinking of she never spoke once or even looked up, enough

Speak soft, baby don't you talk to me

Houdini closed himself inside of a box he didn't have a trick to spring the lock off the stage the people watched, the clock prison could be a nice place to live the bars on the window like bars on a crib freedom is the least desired gift, to give

Speak soft, baby don't you talk to me

Jerry had some beers and started to weep it's time to turn away, it's his time to sleep don't trouble yourself with seeking peace, go cheap
