Tonight my heart's as heavy as these cold gray walls of stone

'Cause I know I'll see my last sunrise with tomorrow's early dawn

'Cause an old gray haired judge said, "Guilty for your crime you must pay"

So with the final curtain falling, I relived my life today

From the time my mama tucked me so gently in my bed

And said, "Son, don't worry about tomorrow, that's another dream ahead"

To the sad eyed old barber that just shaved my head and slipped away

These're the first and final chapters of my life I relived today

I remember the prettiest girl I ever knew with big blue eyes and lips so sweet

How every Saturday, back on the farm we'd go swimmin' in the creek

And the big tent revivals where all the neighbors would sing and pray

That's another chapter of my life I relived today

There's my old faithful dog that walked in every step I made

Sometimes he'd followed me to school

And just laid around there and wait in the shade

When my final class was over and on the way home we'd run and play

That's just another chapter of my life I relived today

My brother Jim died in his cradle, some kind of fever, they didn't know what

Dad used to look at me and say, "Son, now you're the only little man

I've got, but somewhere along life's pathway fate took my hand

And I went astray, that's another chapter of my life I relived today"

Yes, tonight my heart's as heavy as these cold gray walls of stone
'Cause I know, I'll see my last sunrise with tomorrow's early dawn
'Cause the old gray haired judge said, "Guilty for your crime, you must pay"
So with the final curtain falling, I relived my life today
