Melanie in the white coat, wearing the black scar, knocking

on the heads of old ladies.

"Chatter on grannies--wheezing withered fannies-- counting

all your pennies!"

She slips from an octopus riding the Nachtbus leaving him to his limp tendrils. Lechers on the U-Bahn, she says.

"Get away from me mahn! I'm more Man than you'll ever be.

Listen, Listen, listenlistenlisten when I talk to you! Look out, look

out lookoutlookoutlookout your window!"

There goes Melanie in the white coat riding the black bike, wearing her scarf like a bandit. She rides through the city, takes lunch in a cemetery, watches the red cat leap tombstones.

She's sick of being a teacher, suffers a seizure staring at the dead-eyed pupils!"

out, lookoutlookoutlookout your window!"

There goes Melanie in the white coat off to the movies to see her old friend 'Zazie' laughing on the tower while the timid gents cower aghast at her petulance.

out, lookoutlookoutlookout your window!"

Perched on her elbows--calloused fingers, crooked nose-- another late night in stale clothes. Out through the dim street,

clip-clop of her feet, there goes Melanie in the white coat.

There she goes.
