I was ripped apart in disbelief,
With wounds that will probably never heal,
As I hear the echoes of your deafening silence.

The sea soaked the fire in your heart,
That spring the winter lingered,
I just wanted you to wake up.

Rest brother,
Rest brother.

Since that day I hate the morning,
Since that morning I sometimes hate myself,
Know brother, I will miss you always,
Thinking of you will always bring a smile to my face.

You had a heart of steel,
And in this heart is where I'll keep you friend,
Whatever battlefields awaited us,
I would have stood with you to whatever end.

Rest brother,
Rest brother.

I can see you standing there,
In the undying lands,
Screaming for the sun,
With eyes blazing.

A place of unnameless beauty,
Where angels flock the skies,
Where time has long but fled from,
Where you are waiting.

Memories are not enough to keep me sane,
From how deeply I am Hurting,
But I will pick up the flag and keep on running.

Until my time here has ended,
I will set sail in a dream Like ocean,
Where on a golden shore, you shall be waiting.

One less brother on the battlefield,
One more star to light my way in this hateful night.

Someday, our swords will shine together once more.
Until that day, watch over me with a ready sword.
