Feet Above this stratospheric cloud
I will take a walk above your eastern harbor town
A chance for peace and you and me in sight
An offering to heal a wound and make it all seem easier tonight

I can't tell which way to go
You might as well be on your own
You take me high, and bring me low
And I miss you more than you could ever know
And I miss you more than you could ever know

Just above the rooftop where I live
I wish you were below my feet filling my room in Taking breathes, exhaling onto me
Blonde hair running through my hands
And pale white skin sweating on my sheets

I can't tell which way to go
You might as well be on your own
You take me high, and bring me low
And I miss you more than you could ever know
And I miss you more than you could ever know

And I was never one for holding onto anything
I bet I can't hold onto too long
It may just weigh you down
I am far beyond where I thought I would be Far below and far from home

Far beyond where I thought I would be
The mystery inside her eyes is still haunting me
I want to find a postcard, and tell her what I've found
I want to say I love you, but, I'm not sure, I even know how

I can't tell which way to go
You might as well be on your own
You take me high, and bring me low
And I miss you more than you could ever know
And I miss you more than you could ever know
