You traded all your lovers for a house by the river
And all those sweet deceptions and one more broken vow

And the dark-eyed poets who promised you forever, tell me

Where are they now
Where are they now

You were always running, just one more step ahead
And just like all the others, I was following somehow Was it something I wasn't saying, something I should have said, tell me

Where am I now
Where am I now

Now sweet solitude surrounds you like a blanket of wild heather

You are one with the land and the sky somehow And the seasons sway in sympathy as you dance in time together, tell me

Where are you now
Where are you now

And I will write a song for you and try to fill this space
And I'll take the time in passing to wonder from afar Maybe I'll try to find you though you never left a trace And maybe then I will know who you are Maybe then I will know who you are
