Chris DeGarmo, Geoff Tate)

When I fell from grace
I never realized
how deep the flood was around me.
A man whose life was toil was like a kettle left to boil,
and the water left scars on me.

I know now who I am.
If only for a while,
I recognize the changes.
I feel like I did before the
magic wore thin and the "baptism of stains" began.

They used to say I was
nowhere, man,
heading down
was my destiny.
But yesterday, I swear,
there was someone else not me.

Here I stand at the crossroads edge,
afraid to reach out for eternity.
One step, when I look down,
I see someone else not me.

Looking back and I see someone else.

All my life they said I
was going down,
but I'm still standing,
stronger, proud.
And today I know there's
so much more I can be.
I think I finally understand

From where I stand at the crossroads edge
there's a path leading out to sea.
And from somewhere

deep in my mind,
sirens sing out loud
songs of doubt
as only they knew how.
But one glance back reminds, and I see someone else not me.

I keep looking back
at someone else . . . me?
