If eyes were bone
And toes were gold
We'd have somebody new
But ears stick out
And eyes remain
'Cause everyone's the same

They're beautiful
In one and all

The heroes of the world we've left
Have never been the same
They long to us
And to our quest
And see themselves remain

They're beautiful
In one and all

And something should be holding us back
Something should be weighing us down
Somehow we're the casters of kin and bone
By now, we could be standing our ground

They'll take your eyes away
They'll take take take your eyes away
(All as one)

The price we pay to look the other way

When I'm right here beside you

The eyes are bone
The toes of gold
The shape of something new
But here, we're near
The eyes of age

And everyone's the same

They're beautiful

In one and all

And something should be holding us back
Something should be weighing us down
Somehow we're the casters of kin and bone
By now, we could be standing our ground

They'll take your eyes away

They'll take take take your eyes away

(All as one)

The price we pay to look the other way

When I'm right here beside you

Something should be holding us back
Something should be holding us back
Something should be holding us back
Something should be holding us back
