if ever there was a time to touch me too long if ever there was a gone to be our time, that time is gone

cuz you can't say that you can't swim the turn around and jump right in say come on in the water's fine why are you crying?

if ever there was a worse time than this if ever there was a worse idea than to kiss me I can't think of what it would be I can't think at all so help me you can't say that you can't fly then wave to me from way on high say come on up the air is clear why are you just standing there?

oh my love for you it is a changing thing like the world outside my window and oh yes
my patience for you it is a shrinking thing like bones

there's nothing so sweet as a new friend with no past and a present with no end but all shiny things must fade she's just filled the space that you made cuz you can't say that you can't sing then be the song the morning brings sing it to me one more time why are you still crying?

oh my love for you it is a changing thing
my patience for you it is a shrinking thing

bones that break and bones that shatter that bone that juts out above her collar the thing that's shaken me to my bones is the thing I've come to know?

if ever there was a time to be our time,
that time is gone

it is a shrinking thin
oh my love for you it is a changing thing
like bones
