With your falling from your sacred lantern,
Burns me awake and I take wake
That as I fly in your eyes
I smile all life's sufferings

In your bed did you really think there was a monster?
In your arms, did I really need to hide?
In the darkness now alone you will wander,
And I will be burnt in light.

But if after our exile and our torture,
We should meet again someday in love's temple,
There's no doubt: we will light your lantern on the altar,
And that lantern will never ever go out.

Lights out.
Lights out.
