now the birds speak in secret rhythms and the trees bark in secret sounds and the people rush in secret thought and they push the thoughts into the shape of words and sometimes someone among us sticks her head into the shiny phosphorus blue vat
of language and listens, like a skeleton to the pulsing of life within,
and she tells us
of secret rattling angles to watch for and to reach into with strange oceans
and deafening skies
that can be mapped and measured only by sounds
and never by meanings
and once we can tell where we are using the nearest star as it relates to the ragged water (a map of voices) then we can plant our feet into the good ground and go to the rodeo and answer the plum colored hawk and sing to the river
in good faith
god presses his mouth around our head he breaths out
he breathes in
and we are resuscitated in the goofy atmosphere of god
where there are highways and bowling and tattooed by the sun
a circus
made by the prayer of breathing and living hope and barbed eyes
where coyotes hang

and cowboys hammer
posts and branches
to keep us inside

as much as keep someone out and the prayer that is

and it is answered with a breathe gods lips against our own we breath in
we breath out
and sigh
alive again

the unexpected
discovery
of a b-side
of life

(a map of voices)

a warning to others who would come this way an animal who has seen things a horn twisted into shapes understood by strangers recognized by demons
an invitation in the secret language of trees sung in wild shapes
by a child
