He lost the patience
Of all the friends who tried time after time
(No one) will waste their breath on
Trying to speak sense to stubborn minds
Drunk, he knows it all
Answers pouring from bottles
Patiences dry up
Another friend has had enough
No words can seem to open up your eyes
A failed attempt when each of us has tried
The interventions became not so rare
Right to the point when nobody would dare
Those self-righteous arguments wear thin
You're not the same person as then
When did this change for worse begin?
So when did loneliness become your friend
And once of sound mind
Corrupt by the answers that he seeks to find
Turning up wasted at your comfy home
Opposing the advice you try to impose
Telling his views on the world as it seems Emptying bottles like you won't believe
Trying to help someone with no interest
Is tiring when he always knows best
