He's going to close the door
That's what she's waiting for A weary smile as if she could turn back time
Then she starts crying
Instead she turns the key
She steps back silently
All alone the razorblades in her hand
She's diving into night
She's been living in twilight
She's hoping that it will be alright
Tearstained letters she has written Guard the dreams that seem forbidden
They never will be mailed
Nobody will know them
She's diving into night
She's been living in twilight
She's hoping that it will be alright
She's diving into night
She's been living in twilight
She's hoping that it will be alright
It will be alright

Though she's afraid of the dark

She cuts the light from the start

She thinks of getting sick

seeing her life fade

in crimson water

When she is diving into night

When she is living in twilight

She thinks of getting sick

seeing her life fade

in crimson water

When she is diving into night

When she is living in twilight

seeing her life fade
