When she opened up her eyes
She was blinded by the light
Everything was flashing red and blue
She heard do you know where you are
As they pulled her from her car
She saw the helicopter and she knew

It must be really bad
And as they lifted off the ground
The only thing that she could think about

Was the last thing she said
To her husband that morning
And the look on his face
When she slammed the door
And the way she drove off
Without one ounce of regret
And knowing, "I love you"
Was not the last thing she said

She tried to stay awake
Long enough to see his face
Wishing she could take the whole day back
She kept asking where he is
And, "Am I gonna live?"
While the voices in the room faded fast

Before she drifted off
They tried to calm her down
But on and on all she talked about

Was the last thing she said
To her husband that morning
And the look on his face
When she slammed the door
And the way she drove off
Without one ounce of regret
And knowing, "I love you", was not
The last thing she said

He was waiting in the hall, staring at the wall
When he finally saw the doctor walk his way

Oh, he was scared to death, just holding his breath
Up until he heard the doctor say, "She'll be okay"
And right now she needs her rest
But she wanted me to tell you, she's sorry
And, "I love you"
Was the last thing she said
