In bruton town there lived a noble man
He had two sons and a daughter fair
By night and day they were contriving
For to fill their sister's heart with care
One night one night of restless slumber
One brother rose up from his bed
He heard the servant court their sister
Oh he heard they had a mind to wed
Oh when he rose the very next morning
Went searching for the serving man
And when he found him this young man he murdered
Oh left him lying in the briars around
Oh she went to bed a-crying and lamenting
And thinking of her own true love
And as she slept she dreamt that she saw him
A-lying in the countryside all covered with gore and blood
Oh brothers, brothers why do you whisper
And what's become of this serving man?
Oh we lost him where we were a-hunting gone
We lost him where he won't ever be found
Oh she early rose the very next morning
And searched the countryside around
And there she saw her own dear jewel

A-lying in the briars where he'd been found
Three days and nights here did lie by him

She thought her heart it would break with woe

When a cruel hunger came upon her

And in despair to her home she did go
Oh sister, sister why do you whisper

And won't you tell us where you've been

Stand off, stand off you bloody butchers

My love and I you have both slain
