Sharp encephalitis, almost always fatal the beginning is marked by a sensation of anguish, cephalgia,
fever uneasiness and undefined sensorial alterations many times referred to the bite of the animal the inter-human transmission is possible, caused by the spittle of an infected human being that can hold the virus
however wasn't informed, until now the disease evolves to palsy and paralysis the spasm of the muscle carries the patient to death the next step are deliriums and convulsions the common duration is from two to six days the death often is caused by respiratory paralysis
