You would talk and then, let go.
We would sit there on the grass, try to catch the flow
Of thoughts always coming to our minds
And it will be just fine

I would laugh and then get high
Try to make all the stars fall from the sky
Oh, all your sad smiles and troubles left behind
And it will be just fine

A price to pay for now it's been a hundred days
Inside, I feel there's a silent broken dream

That I need your smile to be having a nice time
But you never see why they all are looking at me
And I'll hide away to forget my love is dead
And I'll find, someday why you'll blow my heart instead

I would kiss you at that place
The very same one you filled with grace
You would tell me those words, and always make me shine
'Cause they will be just fine

But soon you'll cry, and slam the door
I'll be calling you, always wanting for more
Of you. I don't know, if what I did was right
When everything was fine

A price to pay for now it's been a thousand days
Inside, I'm sure that you miss me evenmore

And I'll burn my head (and) think of all those things I said
But I'll always care, afraid of every step you take
And I'll hide away to forget those tears I she'd
And I'll find, someday why you'll blow my heart instead

And I will rise, rise, and feel the inside out...

Yes I'll rise, and see why it's tough to get the whole idea

Of love, 'cause you'll be the one coming back to me
And we'll hide away to forget those fights we had
And we'll find someday why they'll blow our hearts instead
