"Wolves At My Door"

The end is just the beginning of being lost then found

You find yourself wondering how it would be if you weren't around

Here I am

Here I stand

I've reached out my hand

But you had a different plan

I've should have known you were one of the wolves at my door

You drain the life from me

I'm so easily deceived

I just wasn't made to believe

I've given so much energy trying to place the blame around

This time it rests on me for letting my guard down

I should have known

All along

You were one of the wolves at my door

Now we're back again at this same old place

I'm just trying to recognize your face

I can't let you in now

That's how it all happens in the first place

I should have known all along

I let you string me along

I was just too stupid to realize

I let myself be compromised
