One hundred days in dessert sand
A drifter in no-man's land
Following someone else's caravan

I roam like a nomad since I left Soaking in solitude
I go without water but not without you

One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you
One hundred, two hundred more, it's up to you to rescue me
One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you
One hundred, two hundred

One hundred days, one summer
Two hundred degrees I'm burning down
I don't sleep at all at night
I lie awake wondering if you're alright

Civilization rises up
Cities come into view
Mirages of places I once went with you

One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you
One hundred, two hundred more, it's up to you to rescue me
One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you
One hundred, two hundred

One hundred days, one summer
One hundred days

Three hundred times put to the test
A sultan without a land
Looking for someone who could understand

One hundred days in dessert sand
It didn't go how I planned

I never knew missing you would hurt so bad

One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you

One hundred, two hundred more, it's up to you to rescue me

One hundred, two hundred, three hundred days since I
saw you

One hundred, two hundred

One hundred days, one summer

One hundred days

One hundred days, one hundred days

One more summer night

One more summer night

One more summer night

One more summer night, now

One more summer night

One more summer night

One more summer night

One more
