"Cologne Collection"

He knew how it easily slips away
And he thought he could preserve it all
So he found a way where he could remember his past
He stored it all in little tiny bottles
It wasn't just a cologne collection
It was much more than what it seems
It wasn't just a cologne collection
It was a place to bottle his memories

His house was filled with half-empty bottles
Each of them worn for three months of his life
If nostalgia was a weapon, he had a full arsenal
The fragrances would take him back in time

It wasn't just a cologne collection
It was much more than what it seems
It wasn't just a cologne collection
It was a place to bottle his memories
His memories...

If only I had a cologne collection
(repeated three times)
But what's the point of bottling memories?
