Baltimore looks so pretty in spring at nighttime
The café doors all propped open wide Low clouds hang around waiting for a chance to open up and fall
But it's nice to be outside

Chinatown bus rolls away from Travel Plaza
The shipping yards sit waiting for another day Sleep comes easy with the hum of a distant motor down below
20 dollars and now I'm on my way

I'm always moving forward

There's something about New York that's got me going Even though it always knocks me down
I get back up and try again you'd think I would have learned
I guess it's just one of those towns

The City peaks up out of the foggy skyline
Through the tunnel and there's no more sky to see Hoodie zipped I'm ready for another chapter of my life
To begin, and that's fine with me

I'm always moving forward

Subway ride arrives at Grand Central Station
Waiting by the tracks with a one-way ticket out Singing songs on the Harlem line, living for the moment
These are things I always forget about

Warm winds blowing in from the Atlantic Ocean
Rain drops falling down on the curving road Grass is growing up tall out of the muddy earth patches
Walking across the bridge where the river overflowed

I'm always moving forward

Walking alone content with my surroundings
Trying to learn how to make each second count Life goes by to quickly to think back on all the memories
That always gets me down

I'm always moving forward
