"The Sad Thing About Sunday Morning"

It's Sunday morning and like sheep with no Shepherd they're turning off alarm clocks and ironing ties above reproach is where we'll be in the eyes of the lesser as they see our family van on it's way to church, on it's way to tithe fundamentally you'll find it at the heart of our religion all the answers and the ways of faith learn it hear and speak Jesus name it's synonymous with this place

And then a committee regulates where the money goes and the people gather who will teach the children and bring the gospel? the Bible doesn't matter we've heard it all a before from sermons and Sunday school never from his book or from his voice the Bible is just a reference tool socially it's all required rituals, rules and youth group trips they walk us through what we believe we never hear love from graceful lips

So bring a date and bring a friend and socialize before service begins

We're making up more as we go along and the weight of the morals the righteous men carry we can make up more rules or cut some of them out it's really all quite arbitrary

We will not learn from he who offers his voice to us daily and gives us life we can read about it in colorful brochures and see when service starts that night

As long as we sit under this roof we're earning our way to a perfect heaven I'm sure the Lord said something similar among the things that were said when he walked among us and healed the diseased if he came to our new location

I'm sure he'd be pleased with all our modern accommodations, new paint and electrical tools while the heathens sit at home, idly they waste away like fools we sit complacent and stagnant and pleased that the building we've made finally suits our needs and now we can learn and grow in this place not by his voice or seeking his face
