When you said never again, I didn't know you were serious
It seems typical for us to act this way
I never said I was perfect, 'cause I've made my fair share of mistakes
Please talk to me, say anything Like I'm a stupid fucking kid who didn't know what he had until he threw it all away

And now I'm starting to think as the seasons change
the cold winds stay with me
She's packing up Vegas bound for the late night raves, cocaine and ecstasy
And now I'm starting to feel like you put me out, 'cause
now I can't pay the rent
I'm calling in favors from friends who never owed me shit.

You said you knew a lot of people, but you didn't tell me how
It seems typical for you to leave that out You never said you were perfect and that was what I was all about
Please don't speak, don't say anything I'm not awake, but I'm alive. I'm just a figment of your stereo.

And now I'm starting to think as the seasons change
the cold winds stay with me
She's packing up, Vegas bound, for the late night raves, cocaine and ecstasy
And now I'm starting to feel like you put me out, 'cause
now I can't pay the rent
I'm calling in favors from friends who never owed me
shit.

How was your trip when you went from town to town?
What was it like to be constantly brought down and used, a piece of me to pass around the van?
What was it like to be the poster for the band?
