Catch me if I'm falling in this town.
Don't know who I'm calling from the ground.
In the light of morning, will you come to show me
grace?
Will I come to see the dawning in the blooming of your face
On the ground.

Evil lurks to take us in our fright.
Worst of all the demons of the night.
Eagerly I seek you in this God forsaken place;
Will you touch my tender body,
Let me know your certain grace.
And when all the chains have broken
And the Gods have made their case,
We'll be found.

Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.

Will you come and greet me on that day?
Will you throw your cares and fears away?
When the sundrenched morning lifts it's face from
forth the ground,
Will you lean your lips eternal to the sentence of my mouth?
And those jealous Gods immortal will like petals hit the ground
When I am found.

Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.

Will you come and greet me on that day?
Will you throw your cares and fears away?
When the sundrenched morning lifts it's face from
forth the ground,
Will you lean your lips eternal to the sentence of my mouth?

And those jealous Gods immortal will like petals hit the ground
When I am found.

Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.

Will you come to greet me on that day?
Will you throw your cares and fears away?

Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.
Oh, wild dove.

Will you fly?
Will you fly?
