She rolled over and stared right through me
The upstairs are screaming; the kid is like a hurricane of loss
Chaos made them love that kid made to save them
And the enemy listened for seconds or so Gathering armies placing them on your acid tongue I felt the wind as their bodies fell hard from the aircrafts
And I pushed my mouth against the bricks of the wall and I scream: "Everybody knows it!"
But your words mean nothing he whispered lightly in front of the apartment Waiting for the alcohol to work And I heard his request so I opened his chest with my bare hands
And I wore his broken body 'casuse it was me counted on
For ten years and twenty-seven days I wore his face and my heart went black in those aircrafts As I pushed their naked bodies out for the wind to catch
And I pushed my mouth against the bricks of the wall
and I scream: "Everybody knows it!"
Everything is hard; there's something wrong Your heart is coloured black And I looked straight at her face. It's always been this way
And I pushed my mouth against the bricks of the wall
and I scream: "Everybody knows it!"
