Hey L.A.

There's an automatic teller machine in the emergency room

There's a meter maid, she arrives by broom

There's a bear in the air with a lullaby

And a big brown coat to keep you warm at night

There's a money tree and the ladder leans up against the trunk

But the steps are greased

Hey L.A., where you're from? Where have you gone now?

Where you're from? Where have you gone now?

Well, it looks as though your spaceship crashed

In Babylon

There's a plastic man with a plastic knife

In a rubber hand at a drastic price

Don't miss this show, you will be amazed

You're a shining star, a needle in the haze

There's a man upstairs with the fire below

There's the elevator and away you go

Hey L.A., where you're from? Where have you gone
now?

Where you're from? Where have you gone now?

Well, it looks as though your spaceship crashed

In Babylon

There's a smooth operator, there's a famous governator

Everybody walks in L.A. on a backward escalator

There's a soul terminator, it's a sea of alligators

On each and every corner there's a broken hearted waiter

Hey L.A., where you're from?

Hey L.A., where you're from? Where have you gone
now?

Where you're from? Where have you gone now?

Well, it looks as though your spaceship crashed

In Babylon
