I will forget your face
Although your face is the only face I love
Lying in the dark
I start to count the days you said you'd stay
But soon my mind takes off to some
Place far away

Where a king is blue because his son
Has lost his smile
And no one knows where they can find another smile
To make the old king smile

I will forget your name
Although your name is the only name I know
Walking down the street
I take the letters in your name and
Shuffle them until they form new words
And then my mind flies back

To this king who's blue because his son
Has lost his smile
And no one knows where they can find
Another smile to make the old king smile
Another smile to make the old king smile

I will forget your name
Although your name is the only name I know
Lying in the dark
I start to count the days you said you'd stay
But soon my mind takes off to some
Place far away

Where a king is blue because his son
Has lost his smile
And no one knows where they can find another smile
To make the old king smile

The king is blue because his son
Has lost his smile
And no one knows where they can find another smile
To make the old king smile
Another smile to make the old king smile
