i saw you pass down headstone road my heart raced on behind you the years were stripped away and you were mine
you looked so different now but looks can be deceiving heartbeat the same same blood through your veins the grassy knoll has long since vanished under concrete
the oak is gone theres a record shop on the memories of days gone by another year pops up the old one slips behind me land bought and sold new traffic through the old a glimpse of you could bring a bright spark of reminders
the years just slipped away
and you were mine
new traffic through the old to multistory car parks a disused office block two roundabouts an underpass five lighters for a pound echoes down the walkway
the oak is gone
theres a record shop on the memories if days gone by last night on the tiles last night in the carpark what would it mean to a sad old git like me
