If you divide the world into two sections if you draw a border between the two specifically some are good and the rest are bad few of them are your buddies and the rest are the enemies on your side everybody is pure, real and cool on the other side they are dirty and monsters but it's all lies, the both sides are the same they cheat on you, you become a step stool for them they look you in the eyes and laugh at you they talk about hope and trust to you you believe them but they bury you into the grave you're a nasty napkin in their hands they clean their sludge soul with you you look around and you see they're all busy with filling their stomachs they chant for you and tell you a national poet you're important to them, Oh, Yeah For Sure! They were all once like you they made it big but now nobody knows their name Everything is lie it's just you and yourself I mean everything is lie don't screw yourself anyone who shakes the right hand to you he has a dagger in the left one, be careful everything is lie even you even me Behold then die but don't stress about it even you in my arms, in love your thoughts get with another person when you see his money everybody's looking to get something from others a relation is a deal that benefits you as long that you can be used you are important this is called the human value everything is lie your love is completely senseless you will easily give me up it's all lies except the tears of the man who sees himself in front of the mirror with dust sitting on his hair he has lost everything in the jail cell that the world created for him everything is a lie except for Saeid's blood the groom who hasn't seen his bride Everything is lie except Khoramshahr the piece of limbs of men and the widowed women it's lie the person who went under the tank wasn't a leader leader was humming song of death in his ears Everything is lie except the poet who hasn't come Everything is lie except the song that no one has sang Everything is lie except the pack of my cigarettes The note that was lost on my guitar Everything is lie except the cold season of shine Everything is lie, even this lie is a lie
