It seems he never lost his way
Through grievous dreams and shattered days
While leaving words weighed on his mind

His road is winding to an end
And now it's time that he defends
The world and friends he left behind

The slow crash landing man unfolds
A future he so gently holds
Then shines his truth like molten gold
We're free again

The slow crash landing man has won
He knows his final race is run
So we unload the starting gun
He's free again

He lived his life in strangers' skin
While all the people breathed him in
They never thought to ask him why

Then on a moondark winter night
The visions crept into his sight
Like heavens' stars swept cross the sky

He rose up from the wreckage
Walked away alive
All cried out in wonder
He survives!

Solo

The slow crash landing man unfolds
A future he so gently holds
Then shines his truth like molten gold
We're free again

The slow crash landing man has won
He knows his final race is run
So we unload the starting gun

He's free again
Free again...

Solo to the end
