I'd hate to say I told you so but you're obviously miserable and denying everything that's happened to you. You're not listening. You walk around oblivious to everything and everyone. You're not listening. Consider all that's left. Do you feel the noose around your neck?

Wait, what was that you said about us holding on to friends? Isn't it the perfect element in this equation we call life? What happened to your own? Were you afraid of being alone? Nevertheless, you put it in his hands now he has the control. So break the mirror and break the silence. Why are all his kind so prone to violence? It seems to be the answer to all of his problems. So, smash it to pieces until it can't be reconstructed. Destroy your only evidence, the only thing that proved you wrong.

Do you find it hard to breathe with the noose so tight around your neck? What will it take for you to leave behind this shattered life and start over again? You're not listening.

I told you so a thousand times before that when he's gone I won't come back anymore to help you to your feet again and I hope that when we meet again, things have changed, I hope they haven't stayed the same.

Do you find it hard to breathe with the noose so tight around your neck? With this shattered life you can't take back?

I'm sorry this happened to you.
