Spent a long, long evening in a low down honky-tonk bar
Pulled a low down lady with a long black honky-tonk car
I asked no questions, I got no lies A one off winner, I didn't want any ties and I knew it wasn't right
Well, everybody has to sometimes break the rules

Took me down on the highway, doing too many miles an hour
And by the way, she motored thought we might have made the Eiffel Tower
She stopped the motor by her own front door
I knew she'd done it so many times before but I was off of the floor
But everybody has to sometimes break the rules

I woke up next morning, feeling kind of up and down Because I did not know if I was in or out of the town Then I saw the face from the night before Purse was empty, lying there on the floor but like I told you before
That everybody has to sometimes break the rules

I spend a low down evening, sitting high on a honkytonk stool
And I spent my money like a low down honky-tonk fool
But everybody has to sometimes break the rules
Well, everybody has to sometimes break the rules
Yes, everybody has to sometimes break the rules
