Sunlight

Such a beautiful day to say

Goodbye

We try to look our best thinking of you

How can I pretend when inside

None of this seems right, the timing isn't mine

There were things we needed to make right

Was so long, I never dreamed that I would see the end

That we wouldn't make amends, come short of reconciling

Still memories remind me he was so calm still and quiet

Precious and powerless but somehow strong

He carried on

Did he realize that you were gone?

I don't know, I see you in him

In voices, faces, expressions

As long as I may stay

I will pray the same

To live a life like a child

And never to forget what I know loving is

To hear him speaking of you

He knew exactly what was happening

Said you were born today

His favorite person in the world

He's different, a breeze of fresh air

Laced with a touch of somewhere familiar

He's tomorrow, he's starting over

He's treasure and survival

Walk the beach with him, talk the day away

And when the sun winds down

And the stars come out he could name one after you

As only a child could do

Put you above, not behind him

Till the end, a bright place
Past the clouds and darkness, distance
