There was a silver circle sign
And she was standing at the door
We pressed our way right through the crowd
Our pace was quickened to her floor
There was a single feigning light
And there was silk all on the walls
She had a lot of love to give
I was prepared to take it all

"But what did she do next?"

She had disrobed and she was waiting on the floor
She asked me what it was I want
I thought that I wanted it all

"What did you say?"

I said, "Stand up and move your body to the bed."
She quickly stood, and slowly turned,
And here's exactly what she said:

"Please be soft and sweet to me,
This life has not been good
You see, its hard with such a history buried in misery."

"And what did you do next?"

I broke a smile reminding that I paid her well
Her lips returned
And then I felt her hands unbuckling my belt

"So was it good?"

Oh, it felt like heaven
But I'm sure she was in hell
I made it clear I'd get my money's worth
Out of the goods she sells

Break and bind yourself to me
Deliver what you've sold
You see that I will only take from you, and use it up

I'll use you up

What was her name?
