Do you remember the late morning
when we went back to bed,
when we found the first position
and every muscle are resting.

I do remember that I already knew it was the last time,
the last time for first positions,
the last time you'll be mine.

Do you remember the scars I showed you, the stories I told you, how I always said forever when you asked me to stay true.

Do you remember when we forgot how to smile at each other, to believe that the other want only what's good for you.

Do you remember the late morning
when we went back to bed,
and every muscle are resting.

I do remember that I already knew
it was the last time,
the last time for first positions,
the last time you'll be mine.
