I sit as tomorrow I die and today I will unburden my soul. These = events have tortured me, and destroyed me. I can still hear her =
faint screams engulfed in the atmosphere around me.
The stench of = ammonia still encircles the room where her disemboweled corpse lies. = One night returning home, much intoxicated, I fancied my wife to = avoid me.
I seized her with the fury of a demon instantaneously possessed. I = knew myself no longer. My original soul, at once to leave my body =
and a more fiendish malevolence, gin - nurtured, thrilled every =
fibre of my frame.
At an instant, I grabbed the knife from the kitchen and left an =

incision from ear to ear. In turn, her limp weak corpse fell = instantaneously. I, in return having received much pleasure from the = initial blow, had begun to cut into her abdomen. Once inside, I = began exploring the regions of her innards. The warm blood still = running, the warm blood still running down my hands is cold and =
damp.
I began to remove her intesti nes, stopping to take a little nibble = or tow. Her uterus seems to mesmerize me as I bury my head into it = and lose myself into a world of the subconscious. For now I know the = many pleasures of my wife, and I will soon be joining
her. (Solo: = Hobbs)
