And her mouth was as red
As the fresh fallen snow
The day she told me again
How another man's love
Was as white as the raven
While mine was blacker than blood
How another man's love
Was as white as the raven
While mine was blacker than blood

And I asked if she knew
For sure that the rain
In her eyes would never run dry
Till the flames of the sun
Ran like ice in her veins
And froze the door to her heart
Till the flames of the sun
Ran like ice in her veins
And froze the door to her heart

And she told me the last time
As if for the first time
If the world turns away from the sun
Then nothing and never
Would always be true
And that she would forever be mine
Oh that nothing and never
Would always be true
And that she would forever be mine

And I swear that the sun
In her eyes turned to stone
And her dress was as white as the moon
And the priest told me nothing
And no one was true
And that she would forever be mine
And the priest told me nothing
And no one was true
And that she would forever be mine

Oh the blackened sole

Of her small bright shoe
Has left its mark
In the long white hall of my heart
